

possible for legal-tender money, was a kind which impaired the strength of the general Treasury resources in somewhat the same manner as the influx of silver certificates which so impaired confidence prior to the panic of 1893. Fortunately, however, in 1908, the Treasu^ balance was so large and confidence in the maintenance of the gold standard so firmly established that no general uneasiness was aroused by this substitution of paper for gold.

